

Article 227: You Made It All Up -part 2

Like all active people, you must visualize what you want and then follow the process or sequence to wherever it takes you, ...however, without determining “an outcome”, you won’t begin ...and the process cannot help you. To start this creative process in your life, focusing utterly on what you want begins giving form to what you made up to create, and this opens your eyes and mind to endless possibilities ...which otherwise remain concealed, ...therefore, while it is important to visualize•make it up•and focus, it is vital that you not be stubborn and narrow-minded ...and miss the possibilities and opportunities presented about other things ...or about how to realize your vision in different ways. In other words, passionately desire what you want ...but not only that.

Focus ...but don’t limit yourself!

As you lower your self-imposed limitations, following this creative process will assuredly present you with many usable options, new opportunities, and finer purposes to create and live, ...for the universe, having no divine purpose of its own, fully supports any and every purpose you desire. “But”, you ask, “what should I chose and create? How can I decide what I want? ...or what I should visualize and make real? A composer hears the music in his head, an architect realizes a building, and a writer senses a story, but I don’t have those abilities, so how do I begin?”

Our answer is always the same, “the most creative and meaningful thing you can do is to make it all up ...and then make it real! After all, the musician didn’t hear someone else’s composition, the architect doesn’t just copy an existing building, and the writer started with a clean sheet of paper ...each of these creative individuals made it all up! There was nothing they had to do, should or must do, or were destined to do, ...they made it all up out of nothing ...and then manifested it, ...that’s the creative process; it was all fake until they made it real!”

In the same way, your life is completely unreal until you creatively manifest it as you desire. Make up an inspiring life and selfimage for yourself ...and then set about bringing that to life. In other words, enliven and realize your dreams! Make it all up and live it! Unfortunately, all your life you’ve been told to “tell the truth”, “be realistic and practical”, “stop making things up”...and now your whole life and everything in it depends upon your making it all up ...and making it real, ...isn’t that weird?

Instead of believing that creativity is special or unusual ...or that it might possess you or have power over you and your life, consider creativity to be a center of wisdom and skill to get in touch with, ...it is your consciousness and the unique soul you have carried through the ages and brought to yourself today for active, conscious participation in your ongoing self and life. Your creative self is beyond or above the false belief in duality, opposites, and judgments ...and therefore will not entice or command you to undesirable actions or emotions, nor will it ever judge you, though your creativity may be insistent and persistent in your living as you truly desire. As you act in your life today at every moment, your creativity offers you a long-standing embodiment and expression of yourself to reflect your actions upon ...and understand the long-term, emergent consequences of each action in every moment.

There is a vast and wonderful difference between who you creatively are ...and who you appear to be to others, ...and though who you are is clearly present in your embodied life and offerings to others, as others generally fail to recognize the truth of themselves, they fail to recognize the truth of you, ...and without this recognition and acknowledgment, you have lost sight of your own creative self ...and have weakened and lessened awareness of yourself. This unrecognized self is, and always has been, fully present in and undifferentiated from your self and life, so do not look for a strange and different self or talent, ...for your creativeself is a long-recognized companion and colleague ...just as your shadow is yours and is always with you, ...but, by searching in unenlightened corners for a separate self or talent, you have darkened and veiled your declaredself. Instead of recognizing your creativeself as an ability you use every enlightened day at every moment, you have shielded your creativity ...and forsaken these aspects of yourself.

Maybe it is time for you to make more desirable, more-creative choices in your life and make them real, ...why have you failed to recognize this? ...or denied so much desirable creativity from yourself? Could it be that you cannot believe your own creative power and greatness? ...your fineness or your own abilities? Your creativeself is certainly not a savior who will guide and protect you ...or enrich and fulfill you, but actively living your creativity as you truly desire enables you to move beyond your present self and life and limitations, ...but even that creative decision rests fully with you.

Live more-creativity ...as you truly desire!
